by

By anger, fear, and avarice deluded,
Men do not strive to understand themselves,
Nor ever gain self-knowledge. One is proud
Of rank and plumes himself upon his birth,
Contemning those of low degree; another
Boasts of his riches, and disdains the poor;
Another vaunts his learning, and despising
Men of less wisdom, calls them fools; a fourth Piquing himself upon his rectitude,
Is quick to censure other people's faults.
But when the high and low, the rich and poor,
The wise and foolish, worthy and unworthy,
Are borne to their last resting-place the grave—
When all their troubles end in that last sleep,
And of their earthly bodies nought remains,
But fleshless skeletons—can living men
Mark difference between them, or perceive Distinctions in that dust of birth or form?
Since all are, therefore, levelled by the grave
And all must sleep together in the earth—
Why, foolish mortals, do ye wrong each other?

PREFACE

No preface is needed to this little book, because the title itself is a sufficient recommendation for its careful perusal by the public without any words of introduction from me, yet, following the usual practice, I venture to say a word or two about this work.

As is generally the case with many an ancient Indian poet, nothing is known about the author of this work. This work inculcates the principles of high rectitude, and truth ordained in the Jain Holy texts, yet, they are common to almost all the systems of philosophy and codes of ethics. It offers salvation to all human beings irrespective of caste, creed, colour, nationality or sex. It begins with offering obeisance to spiritual knowledge, which by fire of contemplation, unfolds divine truths as to the animate and the inanimate by purging the causes of wrong knowledge. It then refers to the method of attaining true happiness, by the eradication of the bondage of Karma, which means the annihilation of inflaming energies such as delusion, lust, anger, pride and their instrumental causes which impair the natural qualities of the Soul. The author rightly condemns the so-called ascetics, who are fondly attached to worldly enjoyments, and deservedly eulogises only those who have secured right knowledge, right belief and right conduct. He prefers the study of a single verse, illumining the path of truth to the study of a number of books with vulgar topics and trivial observations. He recommends the conquest of the ungovernable mind as a sure means of true knowledge. He refers to the superiority of happiness, derived from spiritual trance and quietude of mind over the sovereignty of the three worlds. He highly appreciates and draws a glowing picture of perfect happiness, which ascetics or laymen, who have renounced the world in toto would enjoy and which transcends the blissful joy and high powers derived from Siddhis, Samadhis, and Yogas, which prove a hindrance, being liable to wrong use if they are constantly practised with selfish motives. This lofty virtue of dis attachment he propounds in verses which are at once beautiful, instructive and impressive.

I gratefully acknowledge my indebtedness to the revered Muni Maharaja Vidyavijayjee, the learned disciple of His Holiness the Shastrā Visharada VijayaDharma Suriji whose chief object is the dissemination of knowledge and amelioration of human beings. He was graciously pleased to render the verses in Gujarati and to suggest the utility of the English version.

My sincere thanks are due to Mr Tribhovandas K. Trivedi, Naib Diwan Bhavnager State, for his suggestions while the book was passing through the press, and also to Prof. H. B. Bhude, M. A., LL. B. who took great pains in comparing the English translation with the original Sanskrit text and making useful suggestions, and to Mr Motichand J. Mehta for his great help in preparing the English translation and notes and also to Mr V. K. Patel, M. A. for going through proofs.

Following the kind advice of the Naib Dewansahab, a short life-sketch of Mr Lallubhai Motichand Mehta, B. A.; LL. B. is appended. I am greatly indebted to Prof. Tribhovandas P. Trivadi, M. A. LL. B. for preparing the sketch at my request and to Mr Gulabrai G. Desai, B. A.; LL. B. for his valuable suggestions and advice in connection with the same.

There remains only the pleasing duty to express my deep gratitude to the Hon. Mr Lallubhai Samaldas Mehta, C. I. E. for his kind favour of a foreword.

My thanks are also due to the authors of the books:—Jainism, Naya-Karnika and Hridaya Pradipa of Jain Dharma Prasarak Sabha.

I specially owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Vriddhichandrajee Jain sabha, under whose auspices, I am enabled to undertake this humble work in consonance with its praise-worthy object of disseminating knowledge as widely as possible, and to Mr Ratilal G. Vohra, the Joint Secretary, for his kind encouragement.

FOREWORD.

(By The Hon Mr Lalubhai Samaldas Mehta, C I E)

It is a singular testimony to the excellent qualities both of the head and heart of the late Mr Lalubhai Motichand Mehta that Mr Motilal M Shah, the translator of a well-known work on Varagya, should have thought it fit to connect that young man's name with his work. As a school friend of Mr Motichand I was interested in the growth and educational progress of his son, and it was a pleasure to see the son proving superior even to the father. When his friends chaffed the father on this, he felt more proud of the boy in accordance with the proverb, 'पुत्रादिच्छेत् पराजय'. Owing chiefly to hard work, Mr Lalubhai's health broke down and the nervous strain led to constant attacks of head-ache. It was during one of such severe attacks accompanied by fever that I was able to see the generous, altruistic nature of Mr. Lallubhai. A few students appearing for the B. A. were staying with me, and one of them was unfortunately unable to read much owing to some trouble with his eyes. Just at the examination time Lallubhai had one of his usual attacks and he was ordered by the doctors to give up the idea of appearing for his examination. The disappointment was very great and yet Lallubhai instead of feeling morose and sullen, helped his colleague by reading to him the books of his optional subject which was different from Lallubhai's. An ordinary person would have taken the loss of one year—and Lallubhai could then ill afford to lose one year—so much to heart that he would hardly have been able to do any work at the time, but to do regular work of an unselfish nature in a subject unknown to him and abstruse required a noble, heroic soul, and I then saw for the first time that Lallubhai's soul was such a one.

I have a very vivid recollection of one of my last interviews with the departed young man. Under strong medical advice in Bhavnagar, he had to be brought to Bombay, although he was in a very weak condition and it was half feared that he might succumb on his way to Bombay. I saw him soon after his arrival, and though he was very much exhausted, he received me with a smile on his face. He took the proposal of having an operation performed on him, in the spirit not of resignation only, but of cheerful submission to the will of the Almighty. I saw him soon after he was out of the effects of the chloroform, and I shall never forget the calm and cheerful face of the patient as he replied to my inquiries after his health, which showed that he had made his peace with his God, and was prepared to face the future in a spirit of willing submission to the Highest Will. We all hoped for the best at that time, but fates willed it otherwise, and while the family were to lose one of their illustrious members, and his friends a genial, courteous companion, the State was to lose by his death the services of the young, capable, intelligent officer, who it was expected would be able to rise to the highest rung of the ladder in his department by his loyal services to the State and the people. The disconsolate father tried to keep himself up as he owed a duty to his grandson who was a brilliant boy. That comfort was also denied to Mr. Motichand, whose only solace now lies in his genuine deep Faith in the Teachings of his Religion.

A short biographical Sketch* of Mr. Lallubhai Motichand Mehta, B A, L L B

(By Mr T. P Trivedi, M A, LL B Professor, D. J Sind College)

" Not to no end he lived, though short his day,
Not fruitless all those weny weeks of pun,
Early matured for heaven, he pass'd away,
Nor death he dreaded, when to die was gun "

—Thomas Hill—

* It is one of the saddest nomies of fate for me that at a time when I should have expected to enjoy the pleasurable company of my dear friend Lallubhai, and to derive the benefit from his cheerful conversation and sage counsel, I am called upon to discharge the sorrowful duty of writing down a biographical sketch of his short but noteworthy career. In preparing this slight sketch of a grievously short but highly illustrious career, I have derived considerable information from the members of the family of the deceased, and much valuable assistance from the opinions regarding Lallubhai's character given by men of high respectability and position in life. The extracts from some of these opinions are printed at the end of this sketch. I am

“ The highest object of life we take to be, to form a manly character, and to work out the best development possible of body and spirit—of mind, conscience, heart and soul. This is the end; all else must be regarded as the means. Accordingly, that is not the most successful life in which a man gets the most pleasure, the most money, the most power or place, honour or fame, but that in which a man gets the most manhood, and performs the greatest amount of useful work and of human duty. ”

—Smiles—

Mr. Lalubhai M. Mehta was born in Bhavnagar on the 19th October, 1880. He belonged to a highly respectable and ancient Jain family which has made Bhavnagar its home ever since its migration to this place from Palitana, more than a hundred years ago. Mr. Motichand, the father particularly obliged to the Hon. Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas Mehta, C. I. E. and to Mr. Gulabrai G. Desai, B. A.; LL. B. the leading pleader of the Bhavnagar Bar, for the keen interest which they have taken in this sketch while it was getting ready, and for their valuable suggestions and advice.

of Lallubhai possesses all the qualities which go to make a successful pleader, and had he only chosen to accept Law as his profession after passing his Law Examination in 1894, he would have, by this time, made his name as one of the foremost pleaders of the Bhavnagar Bar, but circumstances willed it otherwise, and he decided to spend his life in the less boisterous and lucrative but more unassuming and sacred profession of a school master.

From his very childhood Lallubhai gave promise of a distinguished after career, and his germinal qualities found a congenial field for rapid development under the fostering and guiding care of the father, who spared no efforts on behalf of his beloveds. On the child rapidly picked up his lessons in elementary education nor was the religious education of the boy neglected and the precocious young student at a very early age, imbibed all the religious ideas and practices of the family. After an uninterrupted and brilliant career first at the Local Gujarati School and subsequently at the Alfred High School, Bhavnagar, Lallubhai passed his Matriculation Examination in 1897. The Previous and Intermediate Examinations were passed from the Samaldas College in 1898 and 1899 respectively, and Lallubhai succeeded in securing a college scholarship on account of his high rank at the Previous Examination. By his successful career, obliging manners, good behaviour towards his fellow-pupils and obedience and respect towards superiors, he won the love and good will of all he came in contact with. The professors of the College under whom he studied had a very high opinion of his attainments and general capacity as a student.

But the brilliant academic career of Lallubhai was unfortunately greatly interfered with owing to his serious illness when he was a student in the B. A. class. In spite of every possible care and expert medical advice, the illness persisted in its course and all idea of study had to be abandoned for some time. Mr. Motichand, on account of his sweet and obliging nature and winning manners, has been able to build up a very vast and enviable circle of intimate friends from amongst persons, belonging to the official and professional classes. Some of these belonged to the highest social status and on account of their sympathy for the family they sent pressing invitations to Lalubhai for a change of air. In response to the wishes of the sympathisers, Lalubhai stayed for some time as a member of the family with Mr Manishanker G. Bhatt, B. A., LL. B. then Dewan of Mingrol with Mr Panachand J. Mehta, B. A. (Deputy Assistant Political Agent) at Rajkot, the late Mr Muljibhai K. Mehta, L. C. E. (Assistant Engineer R. G. J. P. Railway) at Jetalsar, with Mr Kalidas K. Sheth (then Judge) at Jetpur. When Lalubhai went to Bombay in 1904 for his B. A. Examination, the Hon. Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas noticing his ill health, pressinglly detained him for more than a month for the improvement of his health and kindly made all arrangements for medical aid. The enlightened company of these gentlemen had a very elevating effect on the formation of his character. Needless to say, that all these gentlemen did their very best on behalf of the patient and studiously attended to all his wants with more than paternal solicitude. The good effect of their kind efforts was gradually obvious, for Lallubhai considerably improved in health, resumed his studies and successfully passed the B. A. Examination in 1905.

Lallubhai had natural aptitude for legal study as he had inherited all the qualities of a sound lawyer. After passing his B. A. Lallubhai naturally thought of prosecuting his studies for the LL. B. Examination. His Highness, Maharaja Sir Bhavsinhjee, K. C. S. I. was graciously pleased to confer upon him a scholarship of Rs. 20 per month as a special case. Lallubhai joined the Government Law Class in January 1906. He found the study of Law highly congenial to his temperament and successfully passed the final L L: B. Examination in 1907 at the very first attempt.

Immediately after passing his Law Examination Lallubhai was placed by his father under Mr. L. A. Shah, M. A; LL. B. (now the Hon. Mr.

Justice Shah) with the view of gaining some insight into the actual working of the Bombay Law-Courts. At the request of his father he was also allowed by Mr G R Lowndes Barr-at-Law (now the Hon Mr Lowndes, the official member of the Supreme Council) to attend to some of his cases. While he was merrily passing his time in the enlightened company of these legal luminaries and of other learned members of the Bombay Bar, attending the High Court and strengthening and consolidating his legal knowledge, His Highness the Maharaja Sahib of Bhavnagar was pleased to appoint him in May 1908 to the post of an attache to the Chief Judge. While yet a probationer in the Judicial Service, Lallubhai was temporarily entrusted with the onerous duties of the City Magistrate and he succeeded in securing the good wishes of the people and high opinion of his superior officers. Lallubhai afterwards served in the capacity of a Judge at Lalia, Umratala and Botad. He studied and grasped the facts of all the cases with great penetration and deep insight. The higher Judicial Officers of the State have, one and all, borne testimony to his high qualities as a fearless, independent and upright judge.

Lallubhai was easily accessible to the people and he took part in various local activities started for their moral, intellectual and social progress. He performed the opening ceremony of the English School at Umarala in 1912. Subsequently when the school was handed over by its founders to the state authorities for management Mr. Kaushikram V. Mehta, B. A. the Director of State Education, Bhavnagar, referred in very appreciative terms to the help and guidance which the school had received from Lallubhai. Even to this day the school is closed on the anniversary of his sad death in the memory of the departed promoter of the institution. When in 1912 the province was in the throes of a severe famine, Lallubhai personally attended to many of the famine relief measures in his own local area. In short he rendered himself very popular owing to his generous and obliging nature, untiring energy and devotion to duty.

Now we come to the last and most unfortunate phase of his short but glorious career. In the month of August 1912 Lallubhai was once more attacked by a serious illness and though all that was humanly possible to secure a cure, was done, the life could not be spared. All the friends and sympathisers of the deceased and of his father tried their hardest in securing medical advice and rendered valuable services out of sheer love for the family and the personal interest they took in Lallubhai's speedy recovery. Sheth Rattanjee Virji, on coming to know that Dr Burjorjee (the retired Chief Medical Officer, Bhavnagar) recommended the patient for a change of air, very generously placed his fully furnished bungalow at the disposal of the family. The officers of the State as well as the leading citizens visited the family from time to time studiously anxious to know how the patient was faring. Even Their Highnesses the Maharaja Saheb and the Maharani Saheb of Bhavnagar were gracious enough to call upon the family several times and they generously placed expert medical advice at the disposal of the patient. His Highness the Maharaja Saheb was also kind enough to send for the services of W. M. Major. Houston M. B. D. P. H. Agency Surgeon, Kathiawar and to order a medical officer of the State to accompany the patient to Bombay. No words can adequately express the most sincere gratefulness of the family for all that His Highness, who is so well known for his kindness and generosity, was pleased to do on behalf of the patient. But in spite of all these efforts the illness went on increasing and Lallubhai had to be removed to Bombay, where he was, at the pressing request of Mr. Motichand G. Kapadia B. A; LL. B, Solicitor lodged and nursed in his own house. Sheth Narottamdas Bhanjee, Mehta Chatrabhuji Bhaichandbhai, the Hon. Mr. Lallubhai Samaldas C. I. E. and the Hon. Mr. Justice L. A. Shah and others had the kindness to call upon the patient from time to time and to inquire about his health. The highest medical authorities were consulted and their advice was availed of. Finally a surgical operation was performed by Colonel A. Street M. B. I. M. S.

Senior Surgeon, but all this unfortunately proved of no avail. The cruel hand of Death ultimately triumphed and Lallubhai succumbed to his mortal illness on 4th December 1912.

The funeral ceremony of the deceased was attended by a host of friends and sympathisers. Condolence letters and telegrams from highly eminent personages poured in very large numbers. The Mahajan of Umarala, the leading citizens of Botad, Sihor and Bhavnagar, all the officials of the State as well as Mr Ranchhoddas V Patwari (Dewan of Gondal), Sheth Jamanadas Bhagubhai of Ahmedabad and others were good enough to personally call upon the family and to express their sorrow for the sad bereavement.

Lallubhai's marriage had taken place in 1894. He died leaving behind him his aged parents, widow, son and daughter to mourn his loss. But it is an additional instance of the cruel irony of fate that the only son of the deceased who was the pride of his parents met his sad death.

passed away, leaving the whole family engulfed in sorrow and lamentation. This boy was of a highly precocious nature and intensely religious in his temperament from his very young age. May his soul rest in peace.

Thus was abruptly terminated in its very prime a distinguished career which was giving distinct promise of its future greatness. Lallubhai can not be said to be a great man in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used; nor was he a very rich man; nor was it his lot to serve in the capacity of a very high officer of the state owing to the premature and sudden termination of his career; he led an extraordinarily simple life. But it is these simple lives that really count in this world. One notable characteristic which Lallubhai possessed in a remarkable degree, was his organizing capacity. He was invariably entrusted with some organisation work on the occasions of the various College Social Gatherings. When studying for his B. A. Examination in the Bhavnagar Jain Boarding, the junior students looked to him for help and guidance in all cases of difficulty, in fact he did the informal work of the Superintendent of the Boarding while prosecuting his studies. He was equally enthusiastic in the management of the Lalbug Boarding House, when he was studying there for the LL B Examination. He also took an active part in all communal activities. When the 6th Jain Shvetamber Conference was held in Bhavnagar, he purposely came some days earlier from Bombay and did a good deal of active work in organizing and training the corps of Volunteers in conjunction with Sheth Nanotandas Bhanjee, a highly energetic citizen of Bhavnagar.

In spite of such varied activities, Lallubhai was very unassuming and unostentatious in his demeanour. When he passed the LL B Examination, it was with great difficulty and after a weary waiting of no less than six months that he could be persuaded to accept an address from the Jain Dharma Prasarak Sabha. The presentation of this address was presided over by Mr Tribhovanadas K Trivedi then acting Dewan Sheth Mansukhbhai Bhagabhai, Sheth Chimanlal Lalbhai the Nagaratheth of Ahmedabad and other jain luminaries graced the occasion with their valuable presence. Effective and highly eulogistic speeches referring to Lallubhai's qualities of head and heart were made by Messrs. Kunvarji Anandjee, Muljibhai and many others. Lallubhai gave a fitting reply in his characteristic humble manner, stating that such addresses were best given not at the beginning of a man's career but at the end of his career, that he looked upon the address as enormously increasing his responsibility in life and that in the present case his responsibility would be all the greater, as the address was delivered within the sacred precincts of the jain temple before the inspiring presence of Gods.

Lallubhai used to hold very strong and enlightened views on some of the social usages of the present age. He used to condemn the custom of early marriages, saying that it shattered the youth and spoiled the manhood of society. He was a very staunch advocate of foreign travel and used to deplore the backward state of the female education. But while ardently longing for the welfare of his countrymen, he never allowed himself to indulge in any excesses of either opinion or actions, but was always moderate in his views and he strongly deprecated mischievous clamours. He was for adopting the line of least resistance and for carrying as far as possible, the representatives of the orthodox party with him in matters of social reforms, moreover he disliked the idea of all reforms being introduced according to the western views of social reforms. He had a proper regard for some of social and religious institutions of his caste and country and so, he always had an eye to the unsullied maintenance of the good parts thereof. He was in short for reconstructing society on the ancient basis of social and moral culture as also on the firm foundation of plain living and high thinking. His opinions, therefore obtained a careful and favourable hearing from the elders; and had he lived longer, he would have succeeded in promoting the cause of social and religious reforms in a very satisfactory manner.

Lallabhu was also of a very jovial disposition and sweet manners. He treated with uniform kindness and courtesy the members of the Bar, appearing before him. With all this he was intensely practical in his ways and actions, and it was always a pleasure to learn his advice on all matters of difficulty. His superior officers all liked him for his sound legal acumen and able penetration into the facts of all the cases which came before him for hearing.

In fact it may be said without any exaggeration that the deceased possessed in a very high degree all the following qualities of an eminent judge mentioned by Chapman and Shirley:—

“ A judge—a man so learn'd,
 So full of equity, so noble, so notable;
 In the process of his life so innocent;
 In the manage of his office so incorrupt;
 In the passages of state so wise; in Affection of his country so religious;
 In all his services to the king so Fortunate and exploring, as envy Itself can not accuse or malice vitiate. ”

Had Providence spared him, Lallubhai would have gradually risen to a very high position in the Bhavnagar State; but all our expectations have been cruelly frustrated and the only service we can now render to the deceased is to pray that his kind and benign soul may rest in everlasting Peace.

T. P. Trivedi.

"I hear a small pamphlet embodying some of the principles of the Jain philosophy is under preparation by Mr. Motilal M. Shah, and that it is proposed to dedicate the same to your son the late Mr. Lallubhai Motichand Mehta. If this be a fact, I should like to suggest to the author that a short sketch of the life of the deceased, might be inserted in the book along with the dedication. That is the only tribute we, who are left behind to mourn his loss, can offer to one whom we loved and admired. I do not mean to say that the soul of the departed needs from us a physical recognition of this nature in his post-mortem existence."

* * * * *

"The reason why I make the suggestion above referred to, is that it is our duty to discharge the debt we owe to the deceased for his short stay with us. There is also an additional reason why we should do this. A short sketch of his life thus placed on record will be a source of solace to relations and friends alike and it will supply materials for guidance to those who desire to tread in the footsteps of the deceased. * * * "I know more of his inner side while he entered the state service as a judge and came in closer contact with me in his official life. He possessed a very sound knowledge of Law but the thing I admired in him the most was his higher side. We met very often and I always found him amiable and courteous. By his broad-minded sympathy he rendered himself very popular as a judge and was well spoken of by his immediate superiors. With all these traits, he was unassuming so much so that to outsiders he appeared a little over-modest but this impression disappeared on a closer acquaintance. Had Providence spared him I am sure he would have distinguished himself in many spheres of his life's activities." * * *

"I have the mournful pleasure of placing on record my high opinion of the promising character and ability of your late son Mr. Lallubhai Motichand Mehta. Throughout his college career he displayed a steady and intelligent application to studies, was sweet-tempered towards his brother students and paid implicit obedience to his professors. And what little I saw of him after his success at the LL. B. Examination also led me to the view that he would develop into an impartial officer and a pure-minded gentleman. His loss must have been indeed a heavy blow to you and to your family. I would only have you remember that those whom the Gods love die young."

(Principal, Samaldas College)

"I knew Mr. Lalubhai Motichand Mehta perfectly well ever since he served as an attache in the Judicial Department after passing his LL. B Examination I found him to be a promising young man & was much pleased with the way in which he studied and grasped the facts of all the cases and appeals he was asked to attend to

His manners were very sweet and suasive and above all he always tried to consider both sides of a case ably, impartially, as well as with care and circumspection

I could at once see that he had in him the makings of a good Judge and I am glad to testify my anticipations were more than fulfilled by the excellent manner in which he discharged his duties as a judge from the beginning to the end of his career His qualities of heart also were unique I am fully confident that he would have risen to the highest rung of the ladder of service without any hitch or hindrance in case Providence had spared him longer and in case the cruel hand of Death had not snatched him away from earth in the midst of a prosperous and promising career, which he was building for himself by means of high ability, strict honesty and great assiduity.

"I have great pleasure in stating that during the whole course of his career of school and college the one distinguishing trait that I noticed in the character of the deceased which is so rare now-a-days was that he always had a feeling of respect and reverence for his teachers and professors, without any loss of self-respect and independence of thought and action. In his behaviour towards his fellow pupils, I observed that there was a suavity of manners and a nobility of mind that greatly endeared him unfailingly to all he came in contact with. Whether in class room or on the play ground, the purity of motives and the rigid impartiality with which his conduct was invariably marked, clearly showed the germs of the qualifications needed in a future judge and lawyer. I believe, I am quite justified in stating that the late Principal Unwalla and prof Isfahani had also formed a very high opinion of his character and qualifications."

विचेतनं (विगता चेतना intelligence येनाम तेषु) non-intelligent विवेकतां (विवेक noun from विच् to discriminate, कर्ता the power) the power of discrimi-mination. चेतितानि (चेतितं noun from चेतित p. p. of चेत् to move) actions. अनुभवं Bhavanājñāna or spiritual knowledge.

Oh man! Adore that spiritual knowledge, which being well-grasped, unfolds in the heart the power of discriminating five non-intelligent objects of senses गन्ध etc, and which vividly brings before the eyes the actions of previous births.

Notes:— According to Jainism there are two ways through the medium of which knowledge can be received. They are:—(1) Direct perception or immediate knowledge (2) Inference from the facts of actual observation or records, or mediate knowledge. The first is called Pratyaksha including Kevalajñāna, Manahparyavajñāna and Avadhijñāna and the sense perception of ordinary living beings, Matijñāna (Samvyavahāropratyaksha). The second includes under it (1) the Shrutājñāna (2) that which is intellectually inferred.

Anubhavajñāna or Bhāvanājñāna, the subject matter of this verse is included within the first kind of knowledge i. e. Pratyaksha.

Matyānāna and Śrūṭyānāna are preparatory to this Anubhavyānāna, and Anubhavyānāna finally leads on to absolute knowledge i. e. Kevalayānāna.

Matyānāna is generated by senses. When vibrations from the external objects come in contact with senses, organs etc, an awakening in the sense organ is aroused called Vyāṇānāvagraha. Then mind is brought into contact with them and the apprehension that follows is called Arthānāvagraha. The next stage is Jhā in which the mind comprehends similarities and differences. The third stage is Apāya when mind concludes as to what the subject is or is not. Then the final stage is Dhūṭānā where the object concluded is repeatedly remembered.

Śrūṭyānāna is the knowledge got by interpretation of signs. Words are the signs of ideas. It also means the knowledge received from holy texts.

Avadhyānāna is the psychic knowledge, i. e. knowledge of material things known by the soul.

directly without contact of senses. (Vikalapratyaksha .)

Manahparyavajana (Vikala Pratyaksha) is the knowledge of the ideas and thoughts of others (Telepathy). Kecalajana is the unlimited absolute knowledge (Sakalapratyaksha).

Constant reflections joined with the concordance of one's belief with the precepts of the holy texts and the spiritual instructors, can give him a full view of the self and objects of senses; and also enables him to know his past births and the consequences of his past actions

Verse 2

જાનન્તિ કેચિન્નતુ કર્તુમીશાઃ કર્તુ ક્ષમા યે ન ચ તે વિદન્તિ । જાનન્તિ તત્ત્વં પ્રભવન્તિ કર્તુ

કેટલાક જાણે છે પણ કરવાને સમર્થ નથી, કેટલાક કરવાને સમર્થ હોય છે ત્યારે જાણતા નથી, પરંતુ તત્ત્વોને

જાણતા હોય અને ક્રવાને સમર્થ હોય એવા દેહકર્તા પુરુષો હોય છે

કૈશ (noun from કૈ to be capable) able men.
શ્રમા (noun from શ્રમ to be able) able men તત્ત્વ literally the real truth Here it means the religious principles. તિસ્થા rare men

Some people know religious principles, but they are unable to put them into practice Those people who are able to put them into practice do not know them Rare are those people in this world who are both able to know and put them into practice

Notes—According to Jainism there are nine categories jiva (the existence of soul whose characteristic is knowledge) conscious beings.
Ajiva (existence of matter without consciousness) inanimate objects Ashrava the state in which impure souls draw matter (karma) towards them Bandha the state in which impure souls incorporate matter with their own being Samvara
the state in which the influx of matter is stopped Nirvara the state in which, matter already in-combination with the soul is removed. Moksha is a state in which the removal of matter in combination with the soul is accomplished. The qualities Gunya reward and Pāpa punishment are also added to them, thus forming nine.

The acquisition of knowledge is not the only means for the attainment of final beatitude. Religious practices (character) are as essential as the acquisition of knowledge. This could well be illustrated from the following parable of blind and a lame man. Both of them were in a forest under huge conflagration. The blind man could not see the road without fire, while the lame man could not proceed further. Accidentally they met together and by mutual assistance they could pass through the forest without any injury. As their hearty cooperation enabled them to pass through the forest without injury, so knowledge combined with religious practices is essential for salvation.

In this verse attention is drawn to three kinds of men. Some of them know all the principles but they do not follow them in practice! There are others who do things without the proper knowledge of these principles, but there are a few persons endowed with the combination of both knowledge and practice

Verse 3.

જાણના ચિત્તમાં અગ્નિ પ્રકાશની વિન્દિતિ હોય છે, જાણના શુદ્ધ નયોને જાણવાનાં હોય છે, અને જાણને અનુભવજ્ઞાન વડે દૃઢ નિશ્ચય કહેવો હોય છે. તેજ જાણની સિદ્ધિ થાય છે, બીજાની નહિ

વિવર્તિત, (disinherited from the p p of જ્ઞાન with it, the nasal being dropped) non attachment, disaffection તત્ત્વવેત્તા (જાણના યા જેણે તે તત્ત્વવેત્તા or જાણના જેણે જાણેત્તા) knower of real truth અનુભુષિ (same as અનુભવ) knowledge of discrimination tion. सिद्धिः (feminine noun from सिद् to accomplish) accomplishment, or superhuman power.

He alone and none else, attains final emancipation, (he) whose mind is totally free from worldly attachment, whose virtuous preceptor is a knower of real truth and whose firm convictions are always based upon self-realisation.

Notes:—This verse clearly points out the means for attaining final bliss. One should abandon all desires for worldly enjoyments. He should look upon worldiness fatal to his spiritual progress. Neither pleasure nor pain, nor friends nor relatives, nor even life and death should enchain his mind. He must completely renounce all worldly attachments.

He alone deserves the name of a preceptor, who has mastered religious principles, whose conduct is quite pure with the rigid observance of the great vows ordained in the scriptures, who is ready for the good of others by thoroughly propounding scriptural ordinances, and has freed himself from attachment and aversion.

Unshakable belief and firm convictions brought on by meditative practices in conformity with spiritual precepts ordained in the holy texts. One blessed with the above renunciation, and enlightened instructions from a morally elevated spiritual teacher and whose mind is so thoroughly convinced, is sure to progress towards salvation.

Verse 4.

विग्रह कृमिनिरासकुल
 दुःखद हृदि विवेचयन्ति ये ॥
 गुप्तिरद्धामिर चेतन हि ते मोक्षयन्ति तनुयन्त्रयन्त्रितम् ॥

આ ગરીર અનેક પ્રકારના સૂક્ષ્મ મમ્મૃર્છામાંજિ હવેથી
 વ્યાપ્ત છે અને પ્રાણીઓને દુઃખ આપનાર છે એવું હૃદયમાં
 વિવેકપૂર્વક બાતે છે તેજ પ્રાણી ગરીરોપી કેદનાનામાંથી કેદીને છોડાવવાની માફક આત્માને છોડાવે છે.

विग्रह बोधः. कृमिनिरासमंशुः (कृमिणां विनाश मन बन्धु न कृमिनिरासमंशुः) full of the multitude of worms.

गुह्यनिबद्धं (गुप्तौ बद्धं) गुप्ति literally means a cavern or a hole in the ground. Here it means imprisonment. चेतनं (from चित् to know) that which knows, consciousness तदुपयन्त्रयन्त्रितम् (तदुः एव यन्त्रं तस्मिन् यन्त्रितं तदुपयन्त्र-यन्त्रितम्) encased in a physical frame.

Those persons surely are able to liberate their phenomenal soul which is encased in a physical frame, like one in captivity, who distinctly understand in their hearts that the body being full of the multitude of worms contributes to human miseries.

Notes:—This verse describes the composition of this human body in order to withdraw the mind from its attachment. This body of ours is but a mass of worms, humid entrails, tendons etc. - tending to decay, disease and torments, and is also like a pot of filth full of the foulness of worldly affairs and mouldering under the rust of our ignorance. Consequently it is proper for wise men to release the soul encased in it, by renouncing all attachment to it.

Verse 5

આ શરીર મ મારી જીવોને લોગને માટે છે અને

भविना (Gen plural of भविन् from भव the worldly life and इत् a possessive termination) of साग and इत् the possessive termination) of them who are practising yoga, of ascetics सम्यग्ज्ञानम् knowlence कुणपस्य (कुणप a dead body, it is often used in contempt to mean this body) of the body

The worldly beings look upon this body as a means of worldly enjoyments and the yogis surely take it to be the means of absolute knowledge. When on the realisation of truth, worldly enjoyments come to be looked upon as poisonous, why care about nourishing this body?

Notes:—This verse differentiates the stand-points with which the body is viewed by an ascetic and by a worldly man. The worldly man, infected by the poison of worldly affairs and incapable of judging for himself, derives happiness from sensual enjoyments which turn out pernicious in the end, while an ascetic turns to advantage the employment of mind and senses for the achievement of final bliss.

There is no necessity of uselessly nourishing this body when one is fully convinced, by spiritual knowledge, of the foulness of worldly objects.

Verse 6.

Oh soul ! Whence are you so devotedly attached to this body which is filled with skin, flesh, fat, bones, ordure and mine? you are yourself the seer of true knowledge, an eloquent propounder of religious principles and endowed with the power of discrimination Why are you then foolishly attached to worldly objects

Notes:—This verse serves as a reproach to those who are potentially endowed with the light of the truth, power of discrimination and eloquence, or to those, who appear outwardly to possess them, to abandon their attachment which prompts bodily nourishment. This body is a composition of skin, flesh, fat, ordure, and urine. It is frail in its nature. It runs fast towards its dissolution. It is repeatedly subjected to affluence and destitution, pleasure and pain and therefore one should cast off all affections for uselessly nourishing that toilsome and evanescent body, and should endeavour to enjoy perfect tranquillity acquiescing alike in wants and gains.

Verse 7.

દુઃખેષ્વર્ત્તા દિ in the place of દુઃખેષ્વર્ત્તવ્ય is better and more consistent as the case of દેવ must be the same as that of ધન because it stands in apposition In the place of સુખી મ્યાદિતિ the better variant would be સુખી મ્યાદિતિ Because then this verse would be brought into consistency with the preceding and the following verses In verses 6 and 7 મરિન is being addressed as to the right course to be followed by him and in the verse 8 the author undertakes to expound it

Whose wealth is not destroyed or what poor people are not seen to have become rich ? The only cause of misery in this world is the insatiable desire for wealth I hold that you will become happy when freed from the greed for money

Notes — This verse exhibits the unsteadiness of wealth It is reckoned as a blessing in this world, but really it is the cause of all troubles, miseries and anxieties. It begets evils by various acts of malpractice. A rich man without blemish is rarely to be found in this world. It is replete with every kind of danger and trouble. Therefore one should cast off covetous desires and be happy. If at all it is to be rightly acquired one should engage in sinless and faultless business—activities in order to acquire wealth for his use. He should avoid such activity as would obstruct the progress of virtue. At least he should give up such trades as would involve cruelty to animals. His business must not be of an ignoble and degrading nature. The adoption of professional line must be based upon general love and fellow-feeling involving the good of others. If the money is earned honestly, the mind remains in a peaceful state and religious functions are performed in a fearless way.

Verse 8.

સસાર (from मृ to move with सम्) mundane existence પર higher, सच्छास्त्रतो in conformity with the holy texts अयं क्रियते विचार here do I expound the real truth

There is no disease more fatal than the worldly afflictions and there is no medicine superior to good and sound thought. In order to root out that painful disease, I shall now expound the real truth in conformity with the holy scriptures

Notes — This verse points out the remedy for the removal of worldly afflictions. The succession of births and deaths is in itself a great evil. Deadly diseases, bred within the body, are not the only diseases to be remedied, but there are others which feed upon our vital breath, and make our life a cumbersome one. They overpower our mind, intellect and self-consciousness. The unfailing remedy for the removal of it is the proper reflection based upon the precepts of holy texts, because the precepts of the holy texts bring on right belief, right knowledge and right conduct.

Verse 9.

अनित्यतायाः of evanescence. प्रतीति knowledge. निष्ठा firm belief. जनेः (जनमध्ये) in the company of men.

वने [निर्जनस्थाने] in an uninhabited place, forest :

Really a man is happy everywhere in the midst of people or in the forest, if he has thoroughly convinced himself of the destructibility of all things; and if he is devotedly intent on higher truth through the favour of a preceptor, otherwise, he is unhappy everywhere in society, or in a forest.

- Notes — This verse ensures happiness to one, who is introduced to the light of truth. If one has a firm belief in the perishableness of worldly things and relations, and has a firm faith in the religious principles by the favour of a righteous spiritual preceptor, he is happy in all places and at all times whether in the company of men or in the forest.

Verse 10

In this world a man, pained at worldly afflictions, gropes in the infatuating darkness so long as he does not realise the true nature of his innerself by the intense lustre of the Sun of spiritual discrimination.

Notes;—This verse brings out clearly the removal of infatuating darkness by the rise of the Sun of discrimination. The world is full of troubles arising from birth, decrepitude, death, the visitations of direful plagues and famines etc. and the loss of dear objects, relatives and friends. A man suffers from all these miseries and wanders in this world being subject to delusion. But when the radiant light of illumination dawns upon him so as to enable him to realise his true nature, he becomes free from all miseries and acquires transcendental peace.

nature of self, the wealth appears worthless though it is highly valued by others and the amorous advances of beautiful ladies are as impotent as the actions of a dead body (generated by some external power) and worldly attachments are identical with poison.

riches appear as productive of evil.

Verse 12.

परदोषदृष्ट्या (परदोषदर्शनेन) looking at the faults of others. बालबुद्धे (मृदयते) बालस्य बुद्धि इव बुद्धि यस्य तत्स बोधने) oh short witted one !

Do every thing you can for the good of your self and abandon every other thing. What is the use of your looking at the faults of others and what is the use of troubling yourself for others ? Oh you short witted one ! why do you become grieved without any advantage ?

Notes — This verse recommends the attitude of indifference. One defiles his inner self by finding faults of others. It is no business of his, to intermeddle with the affairs of others even though they be proud, immoral and irreligious. One brings upon himself unnecessary evils by indulging in words, thought and deeds, in no way beneficial to society, and therefore, he should avoid all unnecessary pursuits in matters, which do not concern him, or in which there is no sinless benefit.

Verse 13.

Surely, even a fool would not do that act, which being performed, brings on a little happiness, and causes endless miseries, and burns the mind till life endures

Notes — The proper way for a man, is to come to a proper judgment about things after consideration of their respective value. The thing, with the dazzling appearance of a little happiness, and involving high consequential miseries, should be duly balanced and abandoned.

The powerful god of love with a pretext destroys in a single moment, all of contemplation, austerities, knowledge and truthfulness, which the Yatis have devoted their whole life to earn.

Note:—The powers of Cupid are pre-eminently potent in demolishing the well-built structure of virtuous characteristics. Yogis of high meditative practice and of unbearably hard penances are known to have fallen from their right path by lovely and charming blishments of beauties. Productive of high flows mirth, jollity, revelry and lust, sensual enjoyment is very injurious. According to the Jain holy texts the creative fluid can be changed into a higher substance useful for spiritual purposes, if it is known how to change it. It gives in fact a strong will.

The domination of nature's five forces and the efficacy of Mantras, depend upon chastity and purity of conduct. Incontinence brings on a number of worldly disadvantages to householders with regard to money, reputation and spiritual growth. According to the Jain holy texts the following should be observed as it forms a hedge for shielding purity of conduct. Avoidance of physical contact with a woman, living in the same building with female animals or neuter beings, indulging in stories full of love, occupying the same seat shortly vacated by a woman, staying in a room contiguous with the room where a married couple sleeps, ideas of former enjoyment, taking food exciting passion, gorging one self with even innocent

Food, decorating and anointing bodies, ensures purity of conduct.

बोधात् (तत्त्वानां अवबोधात्) through the knowledge of principles अपयति goes afar, hence is destroyed

The inveterate enemy, delusion, perforce, destroys the true knowledge and the discriminating powers of worldly beings. This world, overpowered by infatuation, is itself blinded. The illusion disappears (only) through the knowledge of religious truth.

Notes — Fond attachment to gross bodies, wives, wealth, children etc, generally destroys many virtues. The power of this delusion is essentially spread over all human activities, and tends to create false hopes, the springs of innumerable miseries. It begets various other passions. It obstructs our faculty of realising and relishing the truth, and impedes right actions.

All these illusory attachments disappear when the light of truth dawns on our mind. Healthy prescriptions of reason, brought on by the precepts of holy texts and pious associations, prompt relinquishment of desires and delusion and bring the mind under sound control.

Notes:—All human desires are directed towards the attainment of happy enjoyments and towards the removal of worldly troubles. In spite of all tremendous human efforts, the desired results are not achieved. Some attribute this result to the freaks of destiny or Fatalism. But it is not so. The Jain theory of Karma is not the theory of Fatalism. The theory of Fatalism implies that the human being is tied down to some one and bound down by the force of something outside himself. The law of moral causation (Doctrine of Karma) gives rewards and punishments. A man suffers or enjoys, the consequences of his own actions, and the sense of Fatalism comes in, only when we overlook the element of choice. The causes of disaster are consciously and deliberately avoided by those who wish to remove the impurities from their souls. Consequently a man should diligently apply himself to the cultivation of his reason and then investigate into the works of Karmas, by setting his heart to acts, according to the dictates of holy texts and then exert himself to gain his desired ends.

ought to have been followed with pious zeal and earnestness, is utterly disregarded. So, continuous application of the mind to the realisation of the higher principle, rather than that of the worldly ideals, is highly essential, valuable and desirable.

Notes —The worldly people think to gratify their hunger, thirst etc , by delicious food and flavoury drinks etc but these articles, on the contrary, serve to create keener appetites, and more irresistible desires for their attainment. So, with these considerations, the ascetics, who understand, the true nature of things, employ other means as austerities, penances, chastity and forbearance, to do away with these evils asceticism, light of true renunciation must dawn upon his mind. He must have been thoroughly convinced of the evanescence of earthly objects, and the fact that the revolution in the cycle of births and deaths as man, animal, angel and the denizen of hell, are due to sensual pleasures and enjoyments. Contentment, right reasoning, good judgment and a proclivity to keep good company he must have acquired before he vows asceticism. His mind must be free from passions, sins, doubts and knots of scruples in his heart. Right Belief, Right Knowledge and Right Conduct as embodied in the above, are the surest means to break off the trammels of the world. It must form his clear understanding, that whoever is practised in these lines, and gets mastery over his passions, and secures cardinal virtues, is sure to make spiritual progress towards final beatitude. With these beliefs, firm convictions and holy considerations, present before his mind, he vows asceticism. After his initiation into asceticism, if he cherishes desires for wealth, gems and other valuable possessions, or becomes consciously entrapped into illusory objects and attachment, and eagerly hankers after spicy and delicious diets and flavoury drinks; he surely deserves wholesale condemnation and ridicule and defiles the pure essence of mind, when he is essentially to be apathetic and callous to all worldly affairs.

Thus he stretches the bonds of his worldliness and repeated transmigrations with their growing evils, until they are rooted out by spiritual knowledge, accompanied by right belief and right conduct

Notes on 20th and 21st Verses:—

The preceptors, in the garb of piety, with their minds sullied with impurities, deceit and hypocrisy, sometimes become the object of veneration amongst the people, by their discourses on worldly objects apart from spiritual truth. Generally the mass of people is ignorant of true religious principles, so, naturally they would follow the sermons delivered by those false preceptors, who thereby mislead them from the right path, and thus, they are unable to elevate their souls and of those, whom they lead. The qualifications of a real preceptor are given in the next verse.

Notes:—True preceptors, free from worldly attachments and with a firm belief in religious precepts, are always towards spiritual progress.
They always try to stop the influx of matter, and get rid of the matter in combination with the soul. They rigidly follow the special rules of conduct, ordained for them in the holy texts, and thus develop gradually their spiritual progress. Discourses delivered by them relate to, right knowledge, wisdom, universal love, spiritual strength and substantial happiness etc., but they do not form the subject of worldly matters in conformity with the popular trend and earthly objects, which perpetuate bodily existence, through the cycle of transmigrations.

So long as one (an ascetic) does not realise the true nature of self, he is interested in religious disquisitions, and in propitiating the minds of the people. Who wanders from people to people proclaiming his possession of the best philosopher's stone ?

Notes:—This verse confirms the truth embodied in the previous verse. As long as, thoughts and actions are directed towards personal and selfish ends, they (preceptors) being thoroughly controlled by mind and senses, indulge in religious disquisitions, for establishing their superiority in the eyes of the people. But when their minds, purified by altruistic thoughts and actions and by constant practising of genuine renunciation, progress further towards the realisation of self, the philosophical disputes, discussions and arguments appear to them quite unsubstantial and worthless.

Even the six systems of philosophy bear mutual contradictions over and above there are hundreds of differences in each. All people are devotedly attached to several different religious paths. Who is then able to please the whole world ?

Notes:—There are several systems of philosophy called Darshanas. They are Jainism, The Sankhya system of Kapil, The Yoga system of Patanjali, The Nyaya system of Gotama, The Vaisheshika system of Kanad, Purvamimansa by Jaimini, The Uttaramimansa or Vedanta by Vyas, Buddhism, Mahomedanism, Christianity and also other minor systems. These systems differ partially or totally from each other in various ways with regard to the ideas of Creation, God and Moksha.

Each system embodies in itself the principles of psychology, metaphysics, theology, ethics, spirituality, practical morality and ontology. Forms, conceptions and speculations of each widely or partially differ from those of others. Even a lifelong study will not enable one to master the principles even of one system, with enormous labour, as they are replete with similarities and dissimilarities in themselves.

which throw a veil of obscurity over the true ideal

It is consequently very difficult for one even of high attainment to reconcile the various conceptions of human mind or thought.

Under these circumstances, one should avoid controversial wranglings and disputes, and should devote all his energies to the study of self

If we go a little deeper into the question, we may say that the contradiction among the several Darshanas is inevitable, because the subject matter of discussion is such as can be known only by realisation. Words are always relative and therefore their connotation as regards self, which is absolute, is bound to be imperfect

When real tranquillity of heart is attained, what if the people are displeased, and when the mind is heated with afflictions, what if the people are, pleased? And hence it is that the ascetic, who is resolute, and who has always an attitude of indifference to worldly matters does neither please nor afflict others.

Notes on the 25th and the 26th verses:—

These verses emphasise the potent influence of quietude and indifference. This belongs to the Inner-Self. Whenever there is any feeling of real quiescence, the Self in the ordinary man experiences the unfolding of the nature of the Higher Self. The ordinary man identifies himself with his physical and mental bodies, and thinks that through such bodies he receives happiness. So in order to have quiet and happiness he must have recourse to the withdrawal of worldly attachments, and he must resort to meditative practices, whereby he would be able to remove matter in combination with his soul.

Thus he receives true knowledge. The removal of this impure matter which, prevents up to this time the unfolding of the true nature of self, enables him to realise the inherent bliss. This bliss is superior to that received from sovereignty of three worlds and austerities etc. In the absence of such bliss, all the acquisitions of sovereignty etc are worthless. The ascetic who is blessed with internal peace and quietude, acquiesces alike in, like and dislike, pleasure and pain, and eulogy and censure. All his endeavours should be directed towards spiritual progress.

આ સંસારમાં પાપવડે કરીને છવ એકલોજ નરકે જાય છે, અને પુણ્યથી સ્વર્ગમાં પણ એકલોજ જાય છે, તે પુણ્ય-પાપના સંચયને દૂર કરી મોક્ષ પણ એકલોજ જાય છે. એટલે કે કુટુંબાદિના સંગથી કંઈ સુખ થતું નથી, તે જીવન વડે કરીને કંઈ કાર્ય થતું નથી. એટલા માટેજ હવે આનંદ-સુખમાં પૂર્ણ પુરૂષો એકાકીજ વિચરે છે.

स्वः heaven. पुण्यापुण्यप्रचयाविगमात् through the destruction of the multitude of merits and demerits. मोक्ष final emancipation. सदानन्दसौख्येन always with bliss of knowledge.

A being goes alone to hell on account of his sinful actions, and goes alone to heaven on account of his good actions. He alone receives salvation in consequence of the destruction of the multitude of merits and demerits. No pleasure could be derived from earthly connections, nor could it be derived from the good deeds of others. Therefore the ascetic being endowed with bliss of knowledge moves alone.

Notes:—The yogi, fully conversant with the doctrine of Karma thinks within himself thus:—

"I go alone to hell by my own sins, and I go alone to heaven by my own good deeds. I alone will be blessed with salvation by accomplishing the removal of all matter in combination with my phenomenal soul. I enter this world by myself, I go out of it by myself. I have to do my own work of self-moral improvement, and myself have to suffer my own pains. All the things in this world are separate from me, are not me, the body included, which is only by delusion called oneself."

With these reflections (Ekatva and Anyatva) he dissociates himself from all worldly connections and relations, looking upon these as unsubstantial and worthless, and moves alone in this world.

त्रैलोक्यं the three worlds. मनोजये (ममसः जये) in the subjugation of mind. तृष्णं blade of grass. त्रिलोकी (त्रयाणां लोकानां समाहारः त्रिलोकी) the three worlds.

* Even the kings (paramount) who achieved the conquest of three worlds were not able to subdue their minds. Therefore, the ascetics look upon the conquest of these three worlds as a mere blade of grass in comparision to the conquest of mind.

Notes:—This verse prescribes the complete subjugation of mind as a means for salvation. It is a matter of daily experience, that, the human mind is infested by evil passions, and always fluctuates in the observance of religious duty. It is hotter than fire and stronger than a thunderbolt. It always indulges into restless thoughts and exults in imaginary delights. It has no respite for a moment as a boy from his play. It is more difficult to subdue the mind than to conquer the three worlds. Therefore, those, desirous of salvation should try their best for the attainment of complete mastery over the mind. It is strongly instrumental in working out all karmas, whereby spiritual progress is advanced, and the attainment of final bliss is accelerated.

સંસારસારં the quintessence of worldly existence.

There is no higher meditation than the complete withdrawal of self within self; and there is no higher knowledge than the reflection of spiritual truth; and there is no higher felicity than the happiness derived from deep concentration. These three only are the quintessence of life.

Notes:—

This verse clearly describes the true nature of meditative yoga, knowledge and happiness. The chief ideal of worldly people, is the attainment of worldly possessions, wealth and beauties, and the ideal of those, who are morally, socially and intellectually superior to them, is national rise and service, of mankind etc, and that of spiritually advanced souls is yoga, knowledge and bliss. The spiritually advanced souls look upon the complete absorption of mind in the realisation of self, as the true yoga, and the knowledge which discriminates right from wrong and classifies the principles as jiva etc as worthy of being cognised, abandoned and resorted to, as true knowledge, and happiness derived from concentration as substantial bliss. These are the three essentials, the achievement of which, is a real success in this world.

 bewildered by vague thoughts, anxieties and sensual pleasures. स्वप्नेऽपि even in a dream

Those who do not know the true nature of the spiritual truth, and those who are bewildered by vague thoughts, anxieties and sensual pleasures, and those who are distressed by the troubles of worldly existence can not enjoy even in a dream the happiness, derivable from deep concentration

Notes —The essential characteristics of a Jain, who wishes to attain to the right attitude of mind towards life, truth and the universe, are all based upon love, sympathy, fellow feeling and pity etc. They are the following —(1) Following a profession in a just and honest way (2) The marriage if one can not control his passions to avoid promiscuous indulgence. (3) Avoidance of dangerous spots and pursuits as gambling, lust and drinking etc (4) Appreciation of the actions of spiritually experienced persons. (5) Control of sense pleasures, sexual passions, anger, greed and pride commensurate with his business and household duties. (6) Residence in safe places, where he could perform his duties with perfect safety. (7) Association of good persons. (8) Living according to one's means. (9) Respect for customs, which do not transgress high principles. (10) Avoidance of undesirable habits as slandering and libelling. (11) Respect towards elders, superiors, spiritual teachers and deities. (12) Practice of temperate habits (13) Avoidance of causing unnecessary ill-feeling. (14) Proper discharge of one's duties towards the inferiors and the distressed. (15) Performance of actions tending to the attainment of duty (Dharma), wealth (Artha), desires (Karma) and liberation (Moksha). (16) Arranging the course of life to one's strength, as to advance moral, social, intellectual and spiritual development.

Verse 32.

श्लोको वरं परमतत्त्वपथप्रकाशी
न ग्रन्थकोटिपठनं जनरञ्जनाय ।

सजीवनीति वरमौषधमेकमेव

व्यर्थश्रमप्रजननो न तु मूलभारः ॥

પરમતત્ત્વ (મોક્ષ) ના માર્ગને પ્રકાશ કરનાર એકજ શ્લોક શ્રેષ્ઠ છે, પરંતુ માત્ર મનુષ્યોને રજન કરવા માટે કરોડો પ્રથોત્તુ પઠન સાડ નથી જેમકે જીવનને આપવાવાળી એકજ સજીવની ઓષધીની પ્રાપ્તિ શ્રેષ્ઠ છે, પરંતુ વ્યર્થ શ્રમને આપવાવાળો મૂળીયાનો ભારો નકામોજ છે.

પરમતત્ત્વપથપ્રકાશી (પરમ તત્ત્વ પરમતત્ત્વે તત્ત્વ પથ તત્ત્વ પ્રકાશી) illuminator of the path of highest truth પ્રથોત્તુ the study of innumerable (hundreds of) books
 સંજીવનીતિ (સજીવની is a kind of life restoring plant) વ્યર્થશ્રમપ્રજનન the accumulation of which involves fruitless trouble

Even one verse, illumining the path of religious truth, is preferably superior to the study of innumerable books for the gratification of the people. The single life restoring plant is better than the heaps of vegetable medicines, the accumulation of which involves fruitless trouble.

Note: -The value of a book consists in what it will communicate, but not in what it will do for our amusement. A small book which makes out in thought, what it wants in bulk, is superior to a number of books, with trivial observations, common topics and vulgar thoughts. Even a single verse, which affords materials for pious reflection, and is replete with sound and abundant knowledge of infallible character, is highly valuable. Constant reflection on a single line, elucidating the higher truth accelerates one's progress towards real perfection.

A life restoring plant, which cures all diseases without failure, is more valuable than a heap of vegetable drugs, accumulated after enormous labour and unpleasant troubles.

This verse is well worth being borne in mind by us, living as we are in this age of advertisement

Notes on 33rd, 34th and 36th verses:—

These verses emphatically pronounce the superiority of real happiness, derived from the dawn of spiritual knowledge, brought on by quietude and in difference to worldly objects over the happiness, which proceeds from the attainment of sovereignty of the three worlds, being into its nature unsubstantial, transitory and vanishing.

The worldly people, launched into the vast ocean of worldly life, and taking delight in the phenomenal elements of bodily existence are tossed to and fro by the waves of pleasure and passion.

Sometimes, the acquisition of worldly pleasures and enjoyments in various forms and shapes, gladdens their hearts. Sometimes, the loss of friend, relatives and property etc causes unbearable pain to them. Thus immersed, they begin to feel the suffocating irksomeness of worldiness, with their crude notions of good and evil, they get involved in a large conflict of individual interest, worry and trouble, through enjoying sometimes a few short moments of pleasant life. These verses condemn such persons to the privation of quietude of mind, which lead to spiritual knowledge

The reader might have gathered from the foregoing what lesson this little work attempts to inculcate. It is chiefly of the worthlessness of worldly life and the consequent advisability of renouncing it. Here however we should not lose sight of one fact if we are to properly appreciate Indian Ethics and Philosophy. A charge is frequently brought forward against the Indians, that their philosophy teaches them to look down with scorn upon mundane affairs, and that the baneful result of such teaching is to incapacitate them for playing the right roll, God has assigned to man in the evolution of the world. But to those who have grasped the spirit of Indian philosophy, it is clear as daylight that the charge holds no water. The principal aim is to bring about Vairāgya which can be best done by painting the world in the dark colour; nor can we say the picture fails to represent fact. Exaggeration is said to be a dominant trait in Indian character; and the method adopted by our philosophers in tackling the problem before them is entirely in consonance with it. They particularly emphasise one aspect of the worldly life in order to produce aversion for it and thus facilitate spiritual progress. It is what is sometimes called Arthavāda and not to be constructed too rigidly. Truth seems to lie rather the other way. As the world is constituted, it is impossible that every one becomes an ascetic. A too literal interpretation therefore would mean an absolute embargo on worldly affairs, and it can never be maintained. Hence we find a middle course proposed for layman. Complete disattachment, if practicable, more easily brings about the achievement of the good. But it is not a forbidden fruit for laymen. Some rare instances are noted of even laymen attaining Moksha, but, for the generality of them it may be said that they reap as they sow. They realise spiritual bliss in proportion as they practise disattachment. In fact every thing depends upon the mental attitude of the individual. The busiest merchant may be internally but an indifferent onlooker doing his duty just as an apparently most affectionate nurse has her heart set upon something else while looking after the children of her mistress. The greater the dis-attachment of this sort, the nearer the truth he approaches.

The sum and substance is this, that while the material world engages our attention, we should not ignore its spiritual aspect and that bearing this in mind if we do our duty, we shall slowly but surely, be moving on the onward path, and in the end reach the desired goal.

+ + + + The book is written in Sanskrit and advocates views which are founded on Jain philosophy and metaphysics. The publication of the Sanskrit Text, with its translation into Gujarati & English together with short notes is calculated to make it useful to those who want to become acquainted with this branch of Jain Literature.

Samaldas College Magazine.

This is a booklet giving in compendium the main underlying principles of Jain philosophy. It will be found useful by all; the original Sanskrit verses are accompanied by Gujrati and English translations; in places important explanatory notes are appended. Some of the Sanskrit verses are really charming as they are marked by naturalness of diction and nobility of thought. The work may be used as a text book for imparting religious education by all who are interested in the movement. Works such as this will go a great way in reconciling the differences between Hinduism and Jainism.

It is dedicated to Lallubhai M. Mehta, B. A.; LL. B. late Nyayadhisha in Bhavnagar State. From the introduction prefixed by the Hon'ble Mr. Lallubhai Samaldas, he appears to have been a model Jain and a very popular and able officer. It was unfortunate that he was cut off in his prime of life.
